
Values Education: The end-point is just the beginning. Pedare Christian College – one school's journey towards values development
Gillian Edwards, Pedare Christian College (SA)

Pedare Christian College has been an active contributor to the National Values Education and the National Safe Schools Framework projects, as well as MindMatters, the more recent Success for Boys program and Andrew Fuller's Resilience Project as part of the Drug Education Forum.

This presentation will outline the process used by our school to:

- i. develop a meaningful values education program within its curriculum
- ii. provide a structure for the implementation of such a program

It will focus on:

- ways in which to engage all members of the school community in values education, together with input from local and global communities
- a step- by -step process with which to embed a cyclical pastoral curriculum program that supports values education and which is relevant to the needs and interests of the students
- the development of a whole school approach to values education using existing school structures, expectations, timetabling, behaviour management processes, curricular and extra curricular programs and student led initiatives
